

Edmonton Stragglers: Metis Who Withdrew From Treaty

In the 1880s, the Papaschase band members were suffering severe starvation, thus they took treaty¹ and secured a land base around Two Hills opposite Fort Edmonton as their reserve. Disputes arose between Chief Papaschase and Indian Affairs Inspector Timothy P. Wadsworth about the land size, at which Wadsworth struck 84 band members off the band list and onto a new list called “Edmonton Stragglers”, and placed them on the north side of the Saskatchewan River. This new band included the families of Lapatac and Mahminawatou, twenty-four St. Albert’s Mission orphans, and the Native wives, widows and children of the fur traders at Fort Edmonton. Subsequently, due to disputes over rations and land many of the Edmonton Stragglers and Papaschase Band declared themselves to be Metis left treaty and took scrip.
