

Montana Metis who Took Scrip

Itinerant Metis groups from Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota had been travelling across the Northern USA as far as the west coast since the early 1700s.

Long before the Treaty of Ghent in 1814 set the border line between the USA and Canada, the Metis people crisscrossed the Old Northwest as guides, hunters, traders and freighters. Traders such as Jean Baptiste Dorion (1800-1899) worked in the south for the American Fur Company along the Missouri River and for the Hudson's Bay Company along the North Saskatchewan River.

Elizabeth Dumont (1790-1850) was a member of the Pesew Band of Mountain Cree in what is now Alberta. In 1826 at St. Louis Missouri she married trader Antoine Clement (1765-1848). In 1804, he was working for the North West Company at Fort des Prairies; two years later he accompanied David Thomson across the Rocky Mountains travelling on both sides of the border to the west coast and subsequently worked for the Rocky Mountain Fur Company. After 1821 the couple moved to a small farm outside St. Ferdinand de Florestant just northwest of St. Louis, Missouri. Thus they had children born on both sides of what was to become the border.

Charles McKay (1808-1863) was born at Brandon House on the Assiniboine River in present day Manitoba. Charles was the son of John McKay and Mary Favel a Métisse. His notorious uncle, "Mad Donald," had founded Brandon House. In 1780, Donald MacKay was trading at a post on the Assiniboine River above Portage la Prairie. From that post Mackay took four companions on an overland expedition to the Hidatsa villages on the upper Missouri River. As a teenager Charles worked for the Hudson's Bay Company in Canada then the American Fur Company on the Upper Missouri River. Charles and his family were part of the Sinclair expedition of Red River Metis pioneers who moved to the Oregon Territory in 1841. Charles was part of a group of traders, explorers, and settlers who formed an autonomous government in Oregon in 1843. In 1848 Charles voted for the creation of the Oregon Territory as part of the United States and it became the 33rd State in 1859. At Champog, Charles was elected captain of militia, and in 1855, he took time to serve in the Yakima Indian War. He died on April 1, 1873 in Glencoe, Washington County, Oregon.

Thus by the time the "Medicine Line" was established the Metis had well-established roots both north and south of the line. Many were born in western French and Spanish Territory before the USA made the Louisiana Purchase. Many children of buffalo hunting brigades were not sure which country they were born in.
