

The Avenger: Metis pioneer of West coast

In 1808 the Scottish explorer Simon Fraser opened up the Canadian far west in what historians call "the most terrible and wonderful inland voyage in the history of North America."

At his side in the churning rivers was Jean-Baptiste Boucher, voyageur extraordinaire an adventurer who stayed to pioneer the wild new land of British Columbia.

Born around 1785, Boucher was probably a descendant of the French soldier-diplomat Pierre Boucher, who had been governor of Boucherville, Que., more than a century earlier. But young Jean-Baptiste had the disadvantage of being a Metis, son of a Cree mother and a French father.

In the rigid social class system of early Canada, the label of "half-breed" would end any man's ambitions. But Boucher rejected limitations in every area of life.

Denied the title of Chief Factor in the Hudson's Bay Company, he did a factor's job, was given a house of his own, and became the first Canadian to strike for higher pay. The Indians nicknamed him Waccan — The Avenger — for his relentless pursuit of violent criminals in the lawless west. His marriage to the young Nancy Douglas, a Scottish trader's daughter, was a lifelong love match that surprised the raw colony. His descendants built the rugged northern interior of B.C.

For a week they had followed the breakers, cascades and whirlpools of the Fraser Canyons on the route to the sea. Portaging was as dangerous as canoeing, and their moccasins hand on his gun in case of attack. "You're crazy," he shouted to Waccan. "Don't you know the company's policy is to leave the Indians alone? We don't want any massacres around here."

A month later, Waccan married the Carrier woman in a brief ceremony at the fort.

"They say she was a bad wife to Na'kwol," Harmon had told him.

"She's learned her lesson."

But she hadn't. A week after the marriage she stole Waccan's money pouch. And one morning, when the first spring rains had melted the snow, he awoke to find her dressed for travelling, and with gun in her hand.

"Get back or I kill you," she said.

"Where are you going?"

"You won't find me."

He didn't try. At 25, he had no interest in a lifetime of strife. Gratefully, he rejoined the ranks of the bachelors.

***
In the spring of 1811, Waccan's life was sharply disrupted by two events:

His half-brother, Duncan Livingstone, was murdered by the Babine Indians in eastern New Caledonia.

And he made friends with Scottish company official James McDougall — who had come to the fort with his 18-year-old daughter, Nancy.

Planned revenge

When her mother died I wanted her to stay in the east and have a lady's schooling. McDougall sighed.

laughed, "we've left a trail of blood." From the front of the ragged line Simon Fraser called, "Boucher! You, Waccan. Can you pilot? Only a madman can get us through here."

The tall young man put down his pack, scarcely noticing the loss of 80 pounds. As a teen-ager he had carried 150 on his back without flinching, and at 20 he was a full-fledged Nor'Wester, a company man who had navigated Canada from the east to the farthest west a man had ventured.

"I'm ready," he shouted back.

A hundred feet below, the two cliffs forming the river channel almost met. There were only a few feet on either side for manoeuvring, and the water was hissing and boiling so furiously that a white mist covered it completely. There would be no split seconds to correct a bad course.

Heard own voice

Chapelle and LaGarde silently slapped Boucher on the back. This inland journey was a pact to the death. There was no turning back.

They lowered the canoes to a rocky ledge with ropes. Twenty men scrambled down after them. And without a word they jumped into the boats and spun off into the mouth of hell.

Boucher heard his own voice screaming into the mist, swallowed up by the water's roar. Nature was absolutely indifferent to his fate. He crossed himself, and prepared to die. The lightning-thrust of the canoe rose into the air and fell gently, into calm water. Somehow they had won. The sea lay ahead.

Boucher stood next to his leader at the mouth of the ocean. The hostile coast Indians had attacked several times, and the sight of his tall figure waving a gun had driven them back. Unlike most of the voyageurs — who looked like small gnarled trees — Boucher was straight-backed and nimble on land. Indians, as well as whites, approached him with caution.

But the small party was outnumbered. Bitterly disappointed at not being able to paddle into the open sea, Fraser turned his men back toward the interior.

The return journey was, if anything, worse. The friendly Indians along the Fraser River turned hostile and pelted them with rocks as they fought the current in their canoes.

Hungry, exhausted, their hands bleeding from the paddles and their feet torn by rocks, Fraser and his men returned to Ft. George. The most dangerous venture in the history of Canada's exploration had wound up in little more than two months.

For Boucher the next year went by like the rapids. Simon Fraser, disappointed that the river that led to the sea was not the Columbia — as he had first hoped — retraced some of his earlier route. And Waccan was again piloting his canoe through the narrow and twisting channels.

But once back at the fort he was bored and restless.

"You're too quiet," laughed Bourbone, pushing him toward the dance floor, where drunken Scottish pipers led a wild reel.

"Dancing's not my sport," he said, glancing at the line of Indian women standing by the door waiting for partners.

"The sport's up to you," said Bourbone, draining a bottle of brandy.

But the next day his restless mood hung on.

"We've been asked to assist at a cremation," said Daniel Harmon, the new superintendent of the territory they called New Caledonia. "The Carriers are burying an important man of the tribe. Will you come?"

Woman fainted

Boucher nodded. Few men at the fort spoke Indian languages, and his services were always in demand as an interpreter.

A few miles south of the fort the Carriers had made a winter camp. Inside a lean-to shelter a fire was built, and on it was the body of a man, dressed in a ceremonial robes of war and covered with a beaver-skin cloak.

"Light the fire," said the chief, as two women were pushed forward toward the corpse.

As the smoke rolled up, the women were pushed again and again toward the fire.

"Strike!"

Choking, their faces, streaked with soot and sweat, they patted the burning body with their hands.

Waccan grasped a brave by the shoulder. "What are they doing?"

"Wives of the dead must follow his spirit into the flame," he said. "If they stop striking the body they will be thrown onto the fire."

One of the women fainted. A brave seized her by the hair and dragged her toward the flame. Harmon, his face white, also looked about to faint.

"Get away!" shouted Waccan, pulling the unconscious woman away from the brave. "One death is enough. This is murder."

He ran to his horse, the woman slumped over his shoulder like a sack. Harmon ran after him, his

"I spent my boyhood with my father in the bush," Waccan said. "When he died I kept moving west. Maybe women aren't so different."

But he was nervous and distracted, silently planning revenge. Though he had hardly known young Livingstone, the son of his mother's second marriage, he was determined that the murder should not go unpunished. In the lawless west, the fur trading companies were their own administrators, and vigilantes the only lawmen.

"I've just baked some fresh bread," Nancy called from the kitchen. "Stay and have supper with us."

Waccan shook his head. "You can give me a loaf to take with me. I'm leaving at dawn."

"This is a dangerous business," McDougall said. "You're going into Babine territory with a handful of men. They take a pride in killing outsiders."

Waccan stood up. "If I don't avenge Duncan nobody will," he said. "I have no choice."

He shook McDougall's hand and slapped him on the shoulder. "Don't look so gloomy, you old Scot. We'll be celebrating together soon."

Walking down the forest path to his cabin, he stopped and turned sharply. Behind him was Nancy, her red hair streaming out in the wind, her shawl flying.

"You forgot your bread."

"You shouldn't have troubled."

She looked up at him shyly. "Don't go," she whispered.

He put his arm around her. "You're a funny child. I thought you were full of vinegar."

"I'm not a child. My father says I'm old enough to marry."

"And who are you going to marry?"

"You." As she said it her face burned as red as her hair, and she covered her eyes with her hands. Then she looked at him intensely. "If you don't marry me I'll be single for the rest of my life."

Waccan burst out laughing. "If I don't marry you, you'll be grateful to me the rest of your life. A beautiful young girl in this outpost can do a lot better than me."

He kissed her on the forehead. "I'm only telling you the truth."

"Me too," she said. And as she walked back to the house she turned and looked at him with the glance of a child who had grown up very quickly.

Babine Lake lay glittering at the foot of Fallen Rock mountain, four days' ride from Ft. George.

With four of the fort's hardiest men, Waccan rode into the Indian settlement. His reputation as a lawman and explorer was already established, and few whites or Indians knew him by anything but his Indian name, The Avenger.

Taller and broader-shouldered than any man in the tribe, he struck fear into the hearts of the Babines on sight. With very little question-he heard the story of his brother's murder.

Tsotail took his rifle," one of the men told him. "Livingstone had up his other gun and went to him. But before he could take Tsotail shot him down."

But the Indians' code was kill and pillage. Revenge was an outcome expected and understood. "Where is this man?" said Wac-

Waccan tethered his horse. "Stay, d'Allard, guard the back," he said. "I'm going in alone."

He kicked the door open. Tsotail lay on the floor, his rifle across his back. Instantly Waccan took aim and fired. A red tap opened in the man's forehead. Without a sound he slumped forward.

Waccan walked out the door and locked it behind him. "We're finished here," he said. "Let's go."

At Ft. George a week later, James Douglass knocked on Waccan's door. His weathered face wore an embarrassed smile.

"It's a matter of some delicacy," he grinned, following Waccan into the spartan main room.

"Since when has an old trader like you been delicate?" Waccan asked. "What's bothering you?"

"My daughter. She's a forward girl, and she means to marry you. Since you left it's all I've heard."

Waccan's face relaxed into a wry smile. "So you've come to persuade me to turn her down."

"You're joking. I wanted to make sure you were interested."

Waccan sat forward in his chair, dark hair falling over his face. "Times, you and I know what life's like out here. I'm a half-breed. Another man who does what I do would be chief factor before long. The best chance an old man has is a steady job."

"The company's already given you your own house. You're a hero of the whole territory. You're the most respected man here. I would consider it an honor if you'd marry my daughter."

"Truly?"

"My word on it."

"Then, Mr. McDougall, I'd be happy to ask you for the hand of my daughter."

A month after the wedding, Waccan was appointed interpreter — an official title that carried another name all house at Ft. St. James, 100 miles northwest of Ft. George.

For the next 10 years Waccan was an official deputy factor, assisting the many clerks and factors appointed by the fur companies. And after 1822, when the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company amalgamated, he was the senior employee of the northwest.

For Waccan, there were few peaceful moments. Returning to Ft. St. James from a scouting mission, he was sent to the Babine country to investigate the death of postmaster William Morwick, a Shetland Islander who had served the Hudson's Bay Company for many years.

This time the murderer was taking extraordinary precautions against revenge, and he had barricaded his house like a small fortress. With seemingly unlimited ammunition he fired on Waccan and his handful of men.

"We must get him out of there quickly," said Kwes, their Indian guide. "If he gets the upper hand the tribe will turn on us."

"Maybe we can take him prisoner," said Waccan. He shouted at the fortified door, "Come out with the gun you used to kill Morwick. That's all we want. Bring it to the chief's house and the blood debt will be wiped out."

No answer. More gunfire. Again, Waccan shouted the condition. Five minutes later, the murderer walked out, Morwick's rifle in his hand. He walked along the path to the chief's house, Waccan a few paces behind.

The man threw the rifle on the ground, and turned to Waccan. Two shots rang out. From a bastion above, Kwes had hit his target.

"You disobeyed orders," shouted Waccan. "We were taking him back. That was murder!"

"No," said Kwes. "Justice. Here they don't draw any lines."

Silently they mounted their horses. The murderer's body lay face-down a pool of blood seeping slowly into the earth.

Waccan was scrutinizing a frayed letter under the kitchen's kerosene lamp. One of the children was crying and Nancy, nursing the latest baby, called to the servant girl to see what was happening.

"The company has refused to give me more money," he said. "Now what are we going to do?"

"What we've always done," Nancy sighed, stroking his hair. "I knew we'd never be rich when I married you."

He pounded his fist on the table. This month his contract was up, and he had expected to sign on again as a matter of course. He was now 45, with a life of service behind him.

"Nancy," he said. "I'm not going to sign."

"They'll be shocked."

"I hope so."

Fall was near, and the traplines were set. While the other company men supervised the hunts and brought in the dry goods for winter, Waccan sat on his porch and watched.

"You know you're going to give in," said John Tod. "Might as well do it now and draw a salary."

Weeks went by, and word reached the surrounding Indians. If Waccan had quit who was going to keep law and order? Minor fights broke out with trappers, but no company man rode down to reprimand them.

"Jean-Baptiste, a letter for you," cried Nancy as she ran back from the post office one morning. In her hand was a heavy vellum envelope with the seal of Hudson's Bay Company.

Waccan tore it open and they scanned it quickly. . . . so it pleases us to increase the salary of our faithful employee, Jean-Baptiste Boucher, dit Waccan, by 24 pounds a year. . . ."

"Simpson!" cried Nancy. "The governor himself."

He hugged her tightly. He had stood up to criminals, madmen, and the suicidal rapids of the Fraser. But no man had stood up to the company and won.

"Put the flag up, Billy," he called to his youngest son. "I'm going back to work."

Waccan's career was never interrupted again. For the next 20 years he acted as interpreter, guide, hunter and virtual superintendent of Ft. St. James.

In the winter of 1849 Donald Manson, the chief trader of the fort, sent him down the river to Alexandria, a trading post where an unpopular official had been shot.

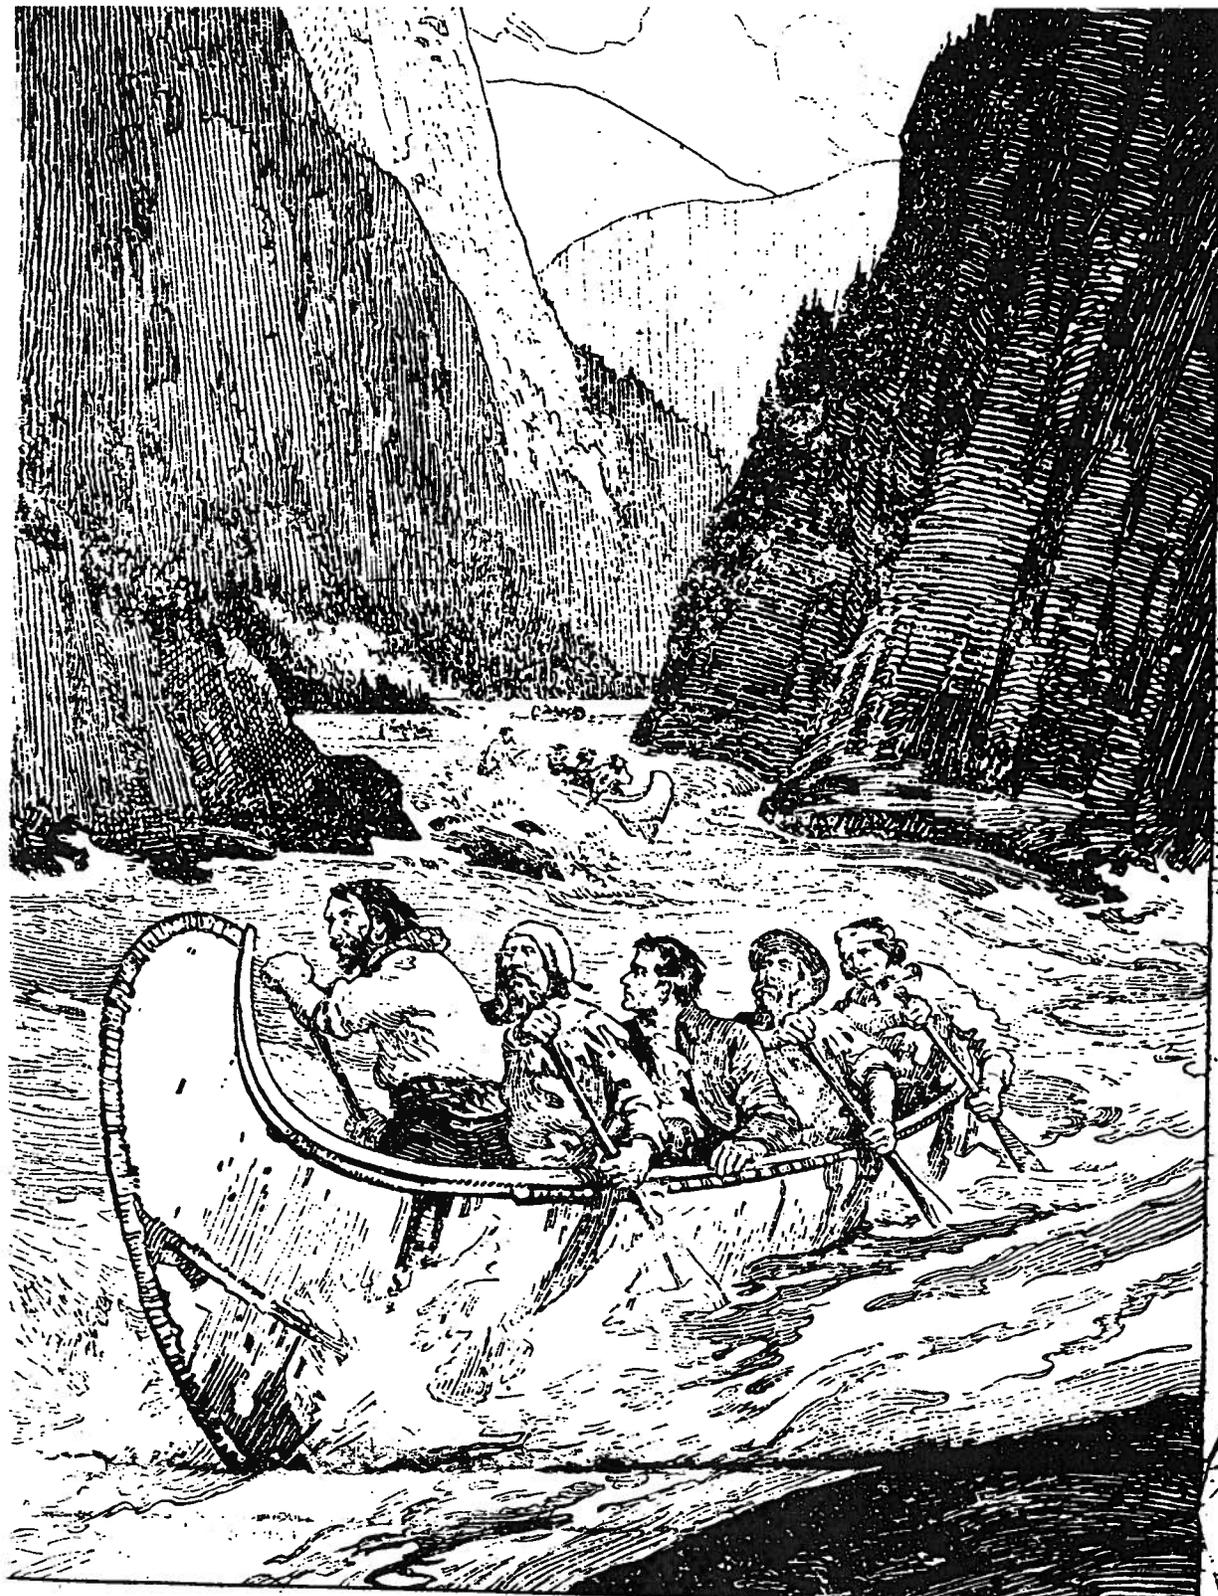

"My principal reason for sending the old man," Manson wrote in his journal, "is that he is known and respected by all the natives of the district . . . and his appearance there will have a very good effect."

Died soon

But an epidemic of measles was raging in Alexandria. By the time Waccan had calmed down the local people and returned to Ft. St. James, he was stricken with it. Shortly after New Year he died.

For the Boucher family, the pioneering saga continued. Twenty years later Waccan's youngest son — one of 17 children — led a pack horse expedition up the Fraser River grasslands to a small, clear lake near Quesnel.

Known as "Billy Bouchie" to the settlers, he was an aide to Sir James Douglas, and a founding member of the Quesnel colony. A plaque, worn away with age, marks the spot where he settled at what is now Bouchie Lake. Copyright Toronto Star Syndicate

Athanase YOUNG, son of Etienne YOUNG, Micmac Indian, and Mary LAVIGNE, married on February 27th 1827, to Mary CHAMBERLAIN, born October 31st 1803, daughter of Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN and Mary PITRE.

Abraham CHAMBERLAIN, born around 1797, son of Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN and Mary PITRE, married on August 31st 1818, to Mary LAVIGNE, born December 9th 1800, daughter of John LAVIGNE and Modeste HACHEY.

David VIENNEAU, born February 24th 1800, son of Jean-Baptiste VIENNEAU and Madeleine LEJEUNE, married on July 30th 1824, to Madeleine LAVIGNE, born October 7th 1804, daughter of John LAVIGNE and Modeste HACHEY.

John IMHOFF came from Holland to the Gaspé Coast, where he married around 1817 Charlotte BAKER-BLONDIN, living in Perce, Quebec, but of German descent. They apparently settled first in Port-Daniel, Quebec, where five of their children were baptized. Two more of their children were baptized in New-Carlisle, Quebec. In the 1870's, John IMHOFF moved to South Tetagouche, N.B., to live with their daughter who was married to Oliver HENRY, the ancestor of the HENRYs of the region. John IMHOFF became a Catholic and was baptized in the Holy-Family church, Bathurst, on April 5th 1873, at the age of 85 years. Charlotte BAKER, John IMHOFF's wife, died at South-Tetagouche on June 18th 1893, at the age of 91 years.

Edward PITRE, born December 20th 1810, son of Charles-Olivier PITRE and Marie-Celeste COMEAU, married on September 14th 1831, to Margaret HACHEY, born January 1811, daughter of Joseph HACHEY and Helen LANDRY.

Francis LEGACY, born in the province of Quebec around 1808, son of Louis LEGACY and Madeleine LEEVESQUE, married at Holy-Family, Bathurst, on June 30th 1830, to Mathilda BOUDREAU, born March 12th 1812, daughter of Joseph BOUDREAU and Rosalie HACHEY of Petit Rocher. They settled in South-Tetagouche.

John DALEY, born around 1804, probably in Ireland. His first wife is not known. She was the mother of Honora, Isaac LEGACY's third wife. John DALEY remarried on February 23rd 1854 at Holy-Family church, to Mary Martin.

*** SIXTH GENERATION ***

Michel BOUCHER, son of Joseph-BOUCHER and Elizabeth MARTIN, married at Holy-Family, Bathurst, on January 19th 1808, to Judith VIENNEAU, born in July 1785, daughter of Jean-Baptiste VIENNEAU and Madeleine LEJEUNE. Michel is the ancestor of the BOUCHERS around Bathurst.

John LAVIGNE, born August 28th 1777, son of John LAVIGNE and Elizabeth BEAUDRY, married on July 22nd 1798, to Modeste HACHEY, born at Miscou on March 19th 1780, daughter of Joseph HACHEY-GALLANT and Madeleine DOUCET.

Etienne YOUNG, Micmac Indian, son of John YOUNG, Micmac, and Madeleine DEDAM, Micmac, married on October 13th 1812, to Mary LAVIGNE, daughter of John LAVIGNE and Elizabeth BEAUDRY. Etienne is the ancestor of most of the YOUNGS of Bathurst.

Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN, born at Cap St-Ignace, Quebec, on November 11th 1753, oldest son of Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN and Louise-Ursule LEMIEUX, married first on the Gaspé Coast to Thérèse LEPEAU called "La Vieille", daughter of Julien LEPEAU and Marie BERTON, and second to Mary PITRE in Bathurst, born in 1762, daughter of Michel PITRE and Mary-Josephe ORILLON-CHAMPAGNE. Jean-Baptiste died in September 1814. He is the ancestor of all the CHAMBERLAINS around Bathurst. Mary PITRE died in November 1824, at age 66.

Jean-Baptiste VIENNEAU, born in 1754, son of Michel VIENNEAU and Thérèse BAUDE, married to Madeleine LEJEUNE, born in 1760, daughter of Eustache LEJEUNE and Mary-Ann BARRIAULT. It must have been his second marriage, because it is recorded in Caraquet church records when he died on August 9th 1808 at age 60, that he was a widower of his second marriage to Madeleine LEJEUNE, although there is no record of his first marriage. He is the ancestor of most VIENNEAUs around Bathurst.

Charles-Oliver PITRE, born in 1772, son of Michel PITRE and Mary-Josephe ORILLON-CHAMPAGNE, married in Caraquet on April 4th 1796, to Mary-Celeste COMEAU, born at Carleton, Quebec, on July 25th 1779, daughter of Francis COMEAU and Mary BEAUDRY.

Joseph HACHEY, born in 1780, son of Joseph HACHEY-GALLANT and Madeleine DOUCET, married around 1802 to Helen LANDRY, born at Caraquet on September 21st 1782, daughter of Anselme LANDRY and Mary BRIDEAU.

Louis LEGACY, baptized at Rivière-Ouelle, Quebec, on January 21st 1783, son of Basile MIGNIER-LEGACY and Catherine DUBÉ, married at Rivière-Ouelle on July 29th 1805, to Madeleine LÉVESQUE, daughter of Joseph LÉVESQUE and Thècle BARD.- Louis LEGACY came to N.B. around 1820 and settled at Green Point. He is the ancestor of all the LEGACY's of the region.

Joseph BOUDREAU, born around 1770, son of Joseph BOUDREAU and Jeanne-Marie HACHEY-GALLANT, married on October 30th 1792, to Rosalie HACHEY, born in 1774, daughter of Joseph HACHEY-GALLANT and Madeleine DOUCET.

*** SEVENTH GENERATION ***

Joseph BOUCHER, baptized in 1736, son of Pierre BOUCHER and Mary-Catherine LIZOT, possibly the same Joseph BOUCHER who is the ancestor of the BOUCHERS of New Brunswick, married at Ste-Anne-de-la-Pacatière, Quebec, on November 16th 1761, to Mary-Rosalie MARTIN, baptized in 1741, possibly the same one called Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Martin and Mary-Rosalie PELLETIER. Joseph BOUCHER came to the Maritimes around 1769 in the St-John River Valley. With the arrival of the loyalists in 1783-1784, he had to move and settled in Bouctouche. Two of his sons: Firmin and Joseph; married and settled in Caraquet. His son, Michel married and settled in Bathurst. Joseph BOUCHER died in Bouctouche on September 19th 1799. His wife died before 1795. They are the ancestors of all the BOUCHERS in N.B.

John LAVIGNE, born in Acadia around 1725, son of Nicholas LAVIGNE and Madeleine DOUCET, married around 1775 to Elizabeth BEAUDRY, daughter of Francis BEAUDRY and Madeleine BOISSEL. He died at Nipisiguit (Bathurst) on August 20th 1822, said to be around 100 years old. He was the ancestor of all the LAVIGNES in the Martimes.

Joseph HACHEY-GALLANT, born in 1744, son of Charles HACHEY-GALLANT and Geneviève LAVERGNE, married at St-John Island (now P.E.I.) around 1765 in front of witnesses, which marriage was rehabilitated and blessed by the missionary at Nipisiguit (Bathurst) on June 22nd 1772, to Mary-Madeleine DOUCET, born in 1748, daughter of Charles DOUCET and Ann ARSENAULT. Joseph died at Nipisiguit (Bathurst) in November 1822, said to be 76 years old. His wife, Madeleine DOUCET, died there on January 29th 1816, said to be 63 years old.

Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN, born March 30th 1724, died in 1764, son of Jean-Baptiste CHAMBERLAIN and Mary-Margaret LUMINA, married on January 11th 1753, to Louise-Ursule LEMIEUX, daughter of Charles-François LEMIEUX and Angélique GOULET. They were living in Cape St-Ignace, Quebec.

Michel PITRE, born at Grand Pré Acadia, in 1735, son of Jean-Baptiste PITRE and Cécile BOUDREAU, married at Quebec City, on May 11th 1759, to Mary-Joséphé ORILLON-CHAMPAGNE, born in 1736, daughter of Charles ORILLON-CHAMPAGNE and Anne RICHARD. Michel PITRE is the ancestor of all the PITRES around Bathurst. He died before 1790. His wife died at Nipisiguit (Bathurst), on November 24th 1808, said to be 75 years old.

Michel VIENNEAU, born in France around 1706, originated from St-Martin-de-Bollène, diocese of St-Paul-Trois-Châteaux, France, married in France around 1730 to Thérèse BAUDE. They were at St-Charles-de-Bellechasse, Quebec in 1758. They settle at St-John River Valley, Acadia, around 1769, but had to move away with the arrival of the loyalists in 1783-84. Michel VIENNEAU died at Memramcook at the age of 100 years 3 months. He is the ancestor of all the VIENNEAUs.

Eustache LEJEUNE called Briard, born in Pisiguit, Acadia, in 1714, son of Martin LEJEUNE and Marie GAUDET of Port Royal, Acadia, married around 1747 to Mary-Ann BARRIAULT, daughter of Jacques BARRIAULT and Mary-Ann TURPIN.

Francis COMEAU called "Junior" because he had an older brother also named Francis, born at Chipoudy, Acadia, in 1756, son of Ambroise COMEAU and Marguerite CORMIER married at Carleton, Quebec on July 1st 1778, to Mary BEAUDRY, daughter of Francis BEAUDRY and Madeleine BOISSEL, and married a second time around 1795, at Nipisiguit (Bathurst), to Isabelle BOUDREAU, widow of Michel FRENETTE, and daughter of Athanase BOUDREAU, and Félicity ORILLON-CHAMPAGNE. By so doing, he became the stepfather of the first FRENETTES in N.B., and is also the ancestor of most of the COMEAUs in the region. Francis COMEAU settled at Beresford.

Anselme LANDRY, fisherman, born at Beaubassin, Acadia, on March 11th 1746, son of Alexis LANDRY and Marie THERIAULT, married around 1775 to Mary BRIDEAU, born at Quebec in 1761, daughter of Louis BRIDEAU and Mary-Thérèse THOMAS.
